

Book Review Guidelines

The journal invites reviews of recently published books pertinent to the focus and scope of the journal. Book reviews should be approximately 1,000-1,200 words in length. In addition to providing a clear overview of the book, the review should offer a critical evaluation of the book. In other words, book reviews should:

- provide a general overview of the book,
- highlight the strengths and weaknesses of the book,
- analyze the importance and validity of central claims of the book,
- indicate whether or not the book represents an original contribution to the field,
- consider potentially controversial elements of the book,
- describe the implications of the book for both theory and practice, and
- consider the pedagogical value of the book.

For edited volumes, the review should provide an overview of the book as a whole and not just focus solely on specific chapters or essays in the book. While some chapters of an edited volume may merit more attention than others, the review should include an analysis of the book as a whole. For textbooks, the review should consider the usefulness of the book as an instructional resource.

Book reviews should begin with a title, followed by a full citation of the book. They should be formatted according the guidelines in the most recent edition of the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association.
